Campers pose for a group picture during The Levi Miles Foundation's 2023 bowling camp Aug. 12 at The Bowling Alley in Paris. The camp was inclusive for all children, including those with disabilities and rare diseases, and featured bowling, arcade games, snacks and a community give back project. The foundation runs quarterly inclusive camps, as well as other support for parents of children with disabilities, rare diseases and bereaved parents.

Inclusion was all around on Aug. 12 as The Levi Miles Foundation held its 2023 bowling camp at The Bowling Alley in Paris.

Campers ecstatically participated in bowling up to two games each, playing in the arcade, enjoying snacks and completed a Community Give Back project.

The camp was for children of all abilities from ages 2-18. Modifications were made for all campers to participate in all activities together. This year's bowling camp glowed with excitement as the theme was all about that glow.

The T-shirts provided to the campers were designed with ink colors that glowed under a black light and glow sticks decorated the kids' necks and wrists.

The Levi Miles Foundation

provides many opportunities for children in local communities to participate in inclusive activities throughout the year. It also provides informative clinics for parents of children with disabilities and rare diseases, as well as bereaved parents.

On top of Kids Camps and Parent Clinics, the Foundation provides many other resources to children with disabilities and rare diseases, including customized care packages, adaptive equipment funding, supporting Best Buddies chapters within the school districts, funding family experiences for families of children with terminal diseases, and funding inclusive playgrounds.
